

Using your Fast-Draw Bow Holder

Sizing the pocket for your cam or limb

The first step when using your Fast-Draw bow holder is to correctly size the pocket for your cam or limb. The pocket should be as large as possible while still holding the cam. The easiest way to size the pocket is to put the holder on and set your bow in it, if it holds it well you are done, if not, adjust the pocket to the next smaller latch point and test it again. Repeat the process until the pocket holds the cam without binding when lifting the bow out. With a recurve or long bow just adjust the pocket down in size until comfortable.

Sitting

When you are going to be sitting for an extended period of time, or when you will be shooting from the sitting position (such as bear hunting), wearing the holder at the knee is the most comfortable position and keeps you ready for the shot with nearly no movement.

The holder should be attached with the top elastic through the top two slots and snugged vertically around the thigh just above the knee. The lower strap is wrapped horizontally around the lower leg just above the calf. See Figure 1.

Sitting / Standing

Use the bow holder in this manner when you will be standing and sitting or when you are going to stand exclusively (such as hunting from the ground). While more comfortable when worn at the knee, you will have almost no weight in your hands.

Move the top strap to the two lower webbing slots as this allows the holder to rotate easier when going to the sitting position. The bottom strap should be snug around your thigh. The pocket of the holder should be centered on your thigh. This configuration will allow the bow to be oriented in line with your shoulders ready for the shot. See Figure 2.

When going to the sitting position just slide the holder to the inside of your thigh and place the bow in the pocket. See Figure 3.
